“ I can only post in this page for whatever reason. Im seating in my car at 7:10 in the morning. Just dropped my kids off at the bus stop. The realization that your birthday hit me right in the gut. Grief is funny that way. Anger is even funnier. Happy birthday dad. And happy Halloween. I know you're still lurking. Keep up the haunt. Oh, have you met Ozzy yet? I love you. Hug my aunt Darlenes neck for me. I miss her terribly.

“ My brother had just talked my parents into getting him a go-cart. He got to ride it a total of 10 maybe 20 minutes when mom made him let me ride in the back yard. And of course me being 10 or 11, I had never been in control of a gas powered item. I was so happy and Billy was so mad he couldn't wait until I was done. He didn't have to wait long. As soon as I got on the go-cart I floored it straight to the end of the backyard, into a center block fence. I never got to ride it again. I can't remember whatever happened to that go-cart. I am sure he rode it to its death. I love you Billy and I will always remember all of the crazy memories we put each other through. Like me stealing your keys off of the bathroom sink to your car while you was in the shower. And when you got wiser (well you thought wiser) and started putting them on the bathtub with you, I just had to be extra quite when I got them from the bathtub. The look on your face when you realized you wasn't going anywhere until I came home had to be the best! I am missing you brother. Dad, Mom, Darlene, and now you can all watch over me and my crew. I love you guys.

“ I'll remember the best times. Forgiveness is hard and I'll be honest about that. Through all the mess my teenage years were, I do value the main lesson you taught all your girls. They know exactly what I mean. I love my sisters. I love my dad. I hope the other side has hockey and Iron maiden. I also hope dad gets to hug his mom and dad. Extra hug my aunt Darlene for me dad, I miss them so much. Say hey to Dean for me. I love you. Rock on in those clouds. ♡
